Police still looking for second witness in Frady case

By Beth L. Chester
Staff Writer

After talking to one of the men depicted in two sketches released Wednesday, authorities investigating the murder of Levi Frady still don't know the identity of the other man in that sketch and now have a third man they would like to locate.

Although they now have a sketch of yet another "potential witness," it may be early next week before that artist's rendering is released - if it's released at all.

Georgia Bureau of Investigation special agent-in-charge Jim Hallman said it may not be necessary to seek the public's help in identifying the man in the latest drawing. "We have an idea we may know who that man is," he said.

The latest sketch was prepared Thursday, after a man police talked to during a roadblock came forward to say he had noticed someone who seemed suspicious near the wooded area where the 11-year-old's body was found.

Hallman said none of the three men depicted in the sketches were seen together and are only considered to be potential witnesses. They are not being characterized as suspects, he said.

As for the man investigators identified and interviewed Wednesday night, Hallman won't say whether agents learned anything significant and declined to release the man's name.

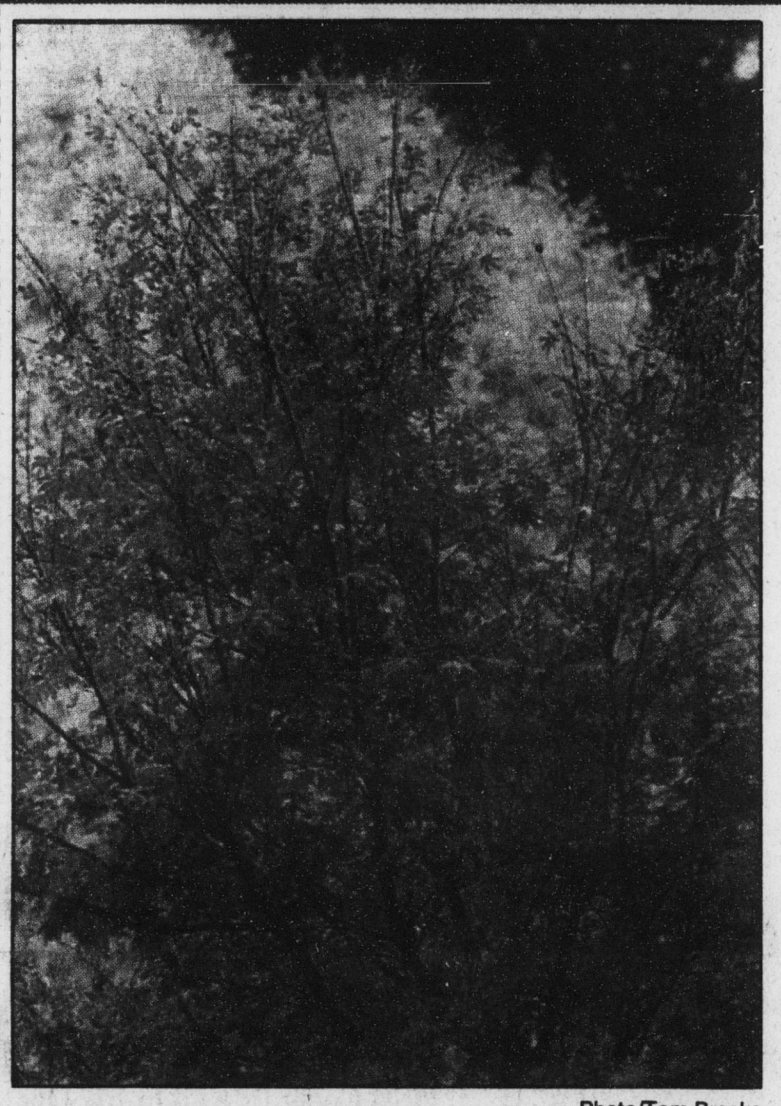

He will only say that agents discovered his identity from the "development of a (vehicle) tag number" and went to his home in Forsyth County on the evening the sketch was released.

Hallman said the man had not seen the sketch of himself and was not aware he was being sought in the case.

The as-yet-unidentified white male in the sketch released Nov. 5 was also seen in the area where Levi's body was found. He was reportedly driving a 1980-85 model medium blue Toyota pickup. Hallman wouldn't say why the person who described the man considered him to be suspicious.

Hallman said "the case is solvable" and investigators are examining every lead "looking for a break," saying authorities still want the public's help. "We would be happy to pay the reward (now more than $15,000) to the person who know something about this killer," he said.

Illegal water hook-up investigated

By Sheri Toomey
Staff Writer

The Sheriff's Office responded to a complaint about an alleged illegal water hook-up in Etowah Trails Subdivision Thursday.

According to the report, there was a water connection hooked up to the main water line but no county water meter was in evidence.

Maj. Earl Singletary and Lt. James Poe took pictures at the site and questioned county water employees about the hook-up. Danny Gilbert and Kenneth Pierson, water department employees, said the line was illegally hooked up since there was no meter, according to the report.

Gilbert also said there was no back-flow prevention valve to prevent contamination of the county's water supply from back-flow pressure. The county shut off the water and put a valve lock on the line, according to the report.

The development is partially owned by Commissioner Kieffer's father, Don Kieffer.

"This was done without my knowledge. I found out about it through the water department and a phone call Friday morning," said Commissioner Kieffer, a builder. "Four commissioners are doing their best to come up with something against me. I've never had any problems standing up for what I believe in and this is their attempt to shut me up."

Grand Jury urges governmental changes

By Sheri Toomey
Staff Writer

The morale of county employees is at an all time low due to past actions by the Board of Commissioners and an existing list of employees that will lose their jobs, according to a Grand Jury presentment filed Nov. 5 in Superior Court.

All board members said they do not know of any list and have not seen it.

"I've canvassed most of the departments and I can't find a problem that's directly linked to anything the board does," said Commission Chairman Bill Jenkins. "If I can get a list I would personally assure them that the board does not have one and the list was not generated by anyone on the board."

Commissioner Lamar Suddeth said any employee who had a morale problem should find another job.

Commissioner John Kieffer said he agreed with the grand jury's assessment regarding morale.

"It's the worst I've ever seen it," said Kieffer. "I attribute it to all the personnel moves and defunding by the board."

At it's first meeting in January the commission voted 4-1 to abolish several county positions including the human resources director position with Kieffer casting the dissenting vote.

The grand jury strongly recommends the board reinstate this position.

Commissioner Julian Bowen questioned why the previous human resources director had not revamped the civil service policies before the new board members took office.

These policies are now being redone by Morris, Manning and Martin, the law firm of county attorney Rachel Iverson.

Applications accepted for Lanier Tech's first quarter

By Beth L. Chester
Staff Writer

Now you don't have to travel far from home to learn a trade. After years of planning and preparation, the doors of Forsyth's campus of Lanier Technical Institute will open Jan. 8 for winter quarter classes.

If you want to be among the very first students to register for classes in the newly-constructed facility, it's time now to take the school's placement test and begin applying for admission and financial aid.

Although the parking lot and driveway to the Majors Road campus have not yet been paved, campus vice president Dan Willis expects finishing touches to be complete by Dec.1. Construction on the $6 million project began last November.

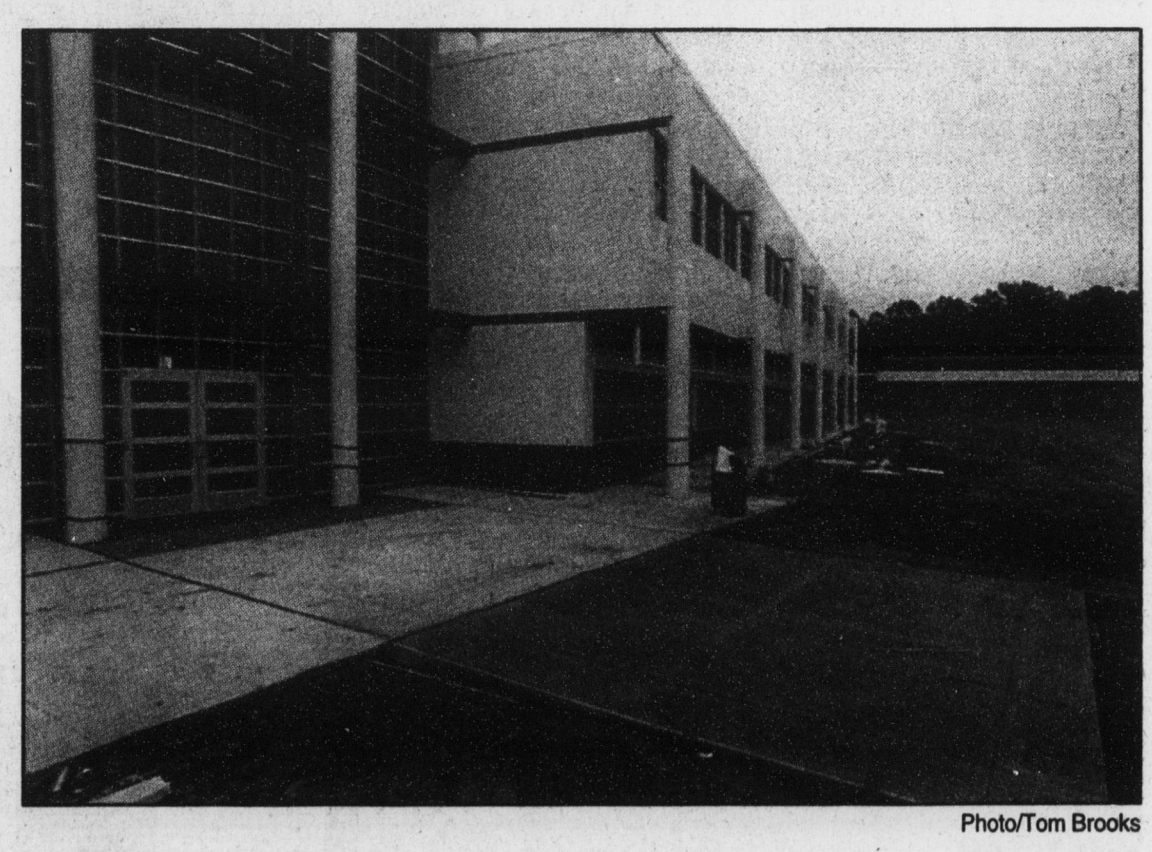

Until then, those interested in pursuing one of the 10 degree or certificate programs being offered may go to the campus' temporary office at Regions Bank in Cumming to apply.

Once school officials take possession of the facility, they will have little more than a week to prepare the campus for the Dec. 11 preregistration.

From learning to be basic emergency medical technicians to studying desktop publishing, computer information systems and electronics, students at the Forsyth campus will have lots of opportunities to succeed.

In addition, programs in automated manufacturing, business and office technology, industrial maintenance technology, C.N.C. setup and programming (machine tool technology), management and supervisory development and telecommunications will also be available.

Rezonings on agenda for board's meeting

By Sheri Toomey
Staff Writer

The Board of Commissioners Monday will review funding engineering services for the Board of Health on an "as-needed" basis.

Numerous rezoning requests which have already been heard at a public hearing will also go through the final decision process.

An 80-acre residential rezoning request by Watson Road Partners LLC on Watson Road which was recommended for approval by the planning commission will be reviewed. Four residents expressed concern about house size, traffic, density, maintaining the country atmosphere and buffer zones.
