Milton Frady's conspicuous absence from his son's funeral Sunday afternoon, and his refusal to help officials in their investigation, continues to fuel speculation about the former Forsyth resident: What, if anything, does he know about his son's murder?

Milton Frady's mother says her son loved Levi and could not have harmed him. She says she hopes police find her grandson's assailant before her son finds the person responsible himself.

And although investigators still haven't talked to Milton Frady, his mother said she has. In a televised interview Sunday night, Milton's mother said her son wanted to attend young Levi's funeral but was afraid officials would arrest him on those earlier charges. The grandmother said her Milton felt it wouldn't help Levi for him to attend the funeral or for him to go to jail. That's also the reason, she said, that Milton hasn't contacted the police.

Dawson County Sheriff Billy Carlisle said Milton Frady can always telephone the sheriff's department or the tip line if he would like to help them find his son's killer. "I would encourage him to call us," Carlisle said.

The fact that he has been a fugitive from Forsyth officials since he failed to appear in court in 1995 doesn't lessen the flow of questions. The day he failed to appear in Forsyth County Superior Court he was scheduled to answer charges that he committed the offenses of burglary and contributing to the delinquency of a minor. When he didn't show up, a bench warrant was issued for his arrest.

Whether a weapon or other evidence was found at the crime scene, officials are not saying. They continue to remain tight-lipped about the investigation, saying they fear release of specific information might hamper efforts to bring the murderer to justice.

SCHOOL from 1A

He was shot to death, the victim of what investigators are calling a murder.

"I really don't know what to say," said Fuqua. She and more than 500 students and faculty attended Frady's funeral Sunday. "But we're not ready to just bury the issue."

Three psychologists and the school's counseling staff returned Monday to help those who wanted and needed to talk about the tragedy.

Parents seemed to have recovered from the initial shock, as was evidenced by the number of children riding the buses.

Fuqua said Friday, it looked like every parent in the school dropped off and picked up their child. Monday, numbers were back up.

But Fuqua said the situation isn't something that will go away over the course of a weekend.

Regardless of the outcome of law enforcement investigation, the faculty and students will remember Frady every day.

Plans are under way for a permanent memorial on the grounds of North Forsyth Middle School.

Fuqua said there are no definite plans on what the memorial will be, but it will rely heavily on student input.

In the meantime, said Fuqua, the school needs exactly what Frady's family and the community needs – time and space to heal.

COMMISSION from 1A

ready to remove the issue of the demotion of Fire Chief Norris Bennett from the table and take action.

"I'm not ready to at this time," said Jenkins, who explained the Grand Jury was inconclusive on some of the issue including specific items he said he had requested the Grand Jury investigate. Anderson said he concurred with Jenkins.

"We should put it off until we have all the facts," Anderson said.

The interim presentment from the Grand Jury's Governmental Affairs Committee, which was to "review and make recommendations," made the following finding: "The previous actions by the Board of Commissioners to demote Norris Bennett from Fire Chief to Assistant Fire Chief, although unbinding, because the actions were voted on incorrectly, were unfounded."

In other business, the commission approved an expenditure not to exceed $35,000 for CH2M Hill to update the county water system's map and computer model. Ken Hall from CH2M Hill was on hand to answer questions which included one from Suddeth about the time frame for the project. Hall said it would take four to six weeks to update the maps and models.

BUS from 1A

decided to be too unsafe to walk a long way. Also students along busy highways, such as Hwys. 20 and 9 are picked up in their driveways.

Allen also said short distances between stops in the past may have been the result of subdivisions being developed in phases but stops not being changed as new phases were added.

The more stops that are added, the more drivers, buses, maintenance and time are needed.

Magill also pointed out last year students were routinely late for school in South Forsyth but this year they have been on time since the first few weeks of school.

Kreager later stated he felt safety was a judgment call and since, in many homes, two parents work and most likely travel a great distance, he was concerned with the students being on their own.

However, both Magill and board member Eddie Taylor said morally they may feel that way but legally they can't address that issue.

The board did not vote on the issue since no change was put into effect. They will meet again for a Nov. 13 work session and for the board's regular meeting Nov. 20.

Correction

In the Oct. 26 story related to the acquittal of county commissioner Julian Bowen, two persons called to the stand to testify about the house in question by Bowen's defense team were Bowen's wife, Susan, and a former county employee. In addition, Mrs. Bowen's sister and her former sister-in-law testified briefly about family matters, including the caretaking of Mrs. Bowen's mother.

Mrs. Bowen's co-worker, Susan Bullock, answered a questioned related to her recollection of a statement by Mrs. Bowen that indicated she and her husband were having family problems.

The defense called a total of five witnesses before resting. A not guilty verdict was handed down Oct. 24.

Domestic violence: A problem that cannot continue to be ignored

By Michael Kurtz
Staff Writer

Government officials and concerned citizens have spent the month of October discussing one of the most disturbing crimes in society: domestic violence.

During the third annual "A Day Without Violence Against Women" march and vigil earlier this month, U.S. Sen. Paul Coverdell said domestic violence and crime against women is something that can no longer be tolerated.

"Every six minutes a woman is beaten, every six minutes a woman is raped, and approximately five million women are victims of violent crimes every year," said Coverdell. "This horrific level of of violent crime against women represents a problem that cannot be ignored."

Most experts agree domestic crime is not limited to any race or socioeconomic group.

Forsyth County investigators spend more time working domestic crimes than burglaries, robberies or thefts. Traffic problems are the only incidents which outnumber domestic violence calls, said Sheriff's Office spokesperson Karleen Chalker.

Sheriff Denny Hendrix said the problem is large enough to warrant a division dedicated solely to the investigation and prosecution of domestic violence offenders. The Oct. 1 murder-suicide investigated by the Sheriff's Office on Castleberry Road is a recent example of domestic violence. In that case, Tommy Pruitt reportedly shot his estranged wife, Tracy Meehan, and then turned the gun on himself.

The Sheriff's Office has applied for a Juvenile Justice Coordinating Counsel grant. The money would provide four officers and two vehicles which would be used only for domestic violence cases. Hendrix said he hopes to hear about the grant by mid-December.

The problem is so bad in many communities that shelters, help hotlines and other prevention devices have become commonplace.

In Forsyth County, Family Haven is dedicated to helping the women and children of domestic violence.

Workers have posted notices and distributed purple ribbons, the symbol of domestic violence awareness, around the county.

In an effort to battle the problem, an automated service has been set up to inform victims of the status of offenders who have been caught.

Victim Information and Notification Everyday (VINE) is a free telephone service which notifies victims when offenders are released, transferred or escape from jail.

By calling (800) 467-4941, victims can find out all the pertinent information about the custody status of a domestic violence offender.

VINE was established in 1993 after the murder of Mary Byron in Louisville, Ky. She was shot to death by an ex-boyfriend who was charged with raping her at gunpoint weeks before. After being released without her knowledge, he ambushed her as she left work.

For information on VINE, call 1- 800-816-0491.
