BOY from 1A

Carlisle said no one has been arrested in the case, but he said he wants to reassure residents it is not likely there is a random killer of children on the loose.

"I don't believe there's any reason to fear that there's anyone out abducting young boys," said Carlisle.

But that didn't calm the fears of Forsyth County parents Friday. Sheriff's Office deputies reported a dramatic increase in the number of parents picking up their children from school Friday afternoon. North Forsyth Middle School offered counseling to students and faculty to help deal with the situation.

Cumming New Life church has set up a contribution fund for the family. For information on the funds, call Lanier Bank and Trust at 887-1732, Citizens Bank at 886-9500 or Cumming New Life Church at 889-6919.

Frady's funeral was planned for Sunday at Ingram Funeral Home Chapel. Interment was to be at Sawnee View Garden.

of the constitutionally protected right to remain silent during questioning.

However, authorities have not yet been able to talk to everyone close to the boy. Carlisle said authorities are actively searching for Levi's 34-year-old father, Milton Frady. Carlisle stressed Milton is not considered a suspect in the case.

Instead, Carlisle said the Cumming resident, who is estranged from the his son's mother, is only wanted in connection with previous charges. Carlisle said investigators would like to speak to Milton Frady about his son's death when he is found.

Before Levi disappeared, Forsyth officials say they held warrants for Milton Frady's arrest on non-violent charges, including an alleged burglary, a superior court bench warrant and contributing to the delinquency of a minor. He is described as a 5-feet, 11-inch tall white male, weighing approximately 170 pounds. He has shoulder-length brown hair and hazel eyes.

Parents should not be unduly worried that there is a random child abductor on the loose, Carlisle said: "I don't think there is a reason to fear that. When something like this happens, statistically speaking, the victim usually knows the perpetrator," Carlisle said, although he stressed that he is "not saying that is what happened in this case."

Very little is being divulged about the crime scene itself, and authorities won't say whether evidence of sexual abuse was discovered. Carlisle also would not say whether the boy was found wearing each item of clothing he was reportedly dressed in when he was last seen: "I will only say that he was clothed."

Whether other potential evidence was found at the scene, he would not confirm nor deny.

"We don't want to give out too much information about the crime scene itself to prevent tarnishing the investigation."

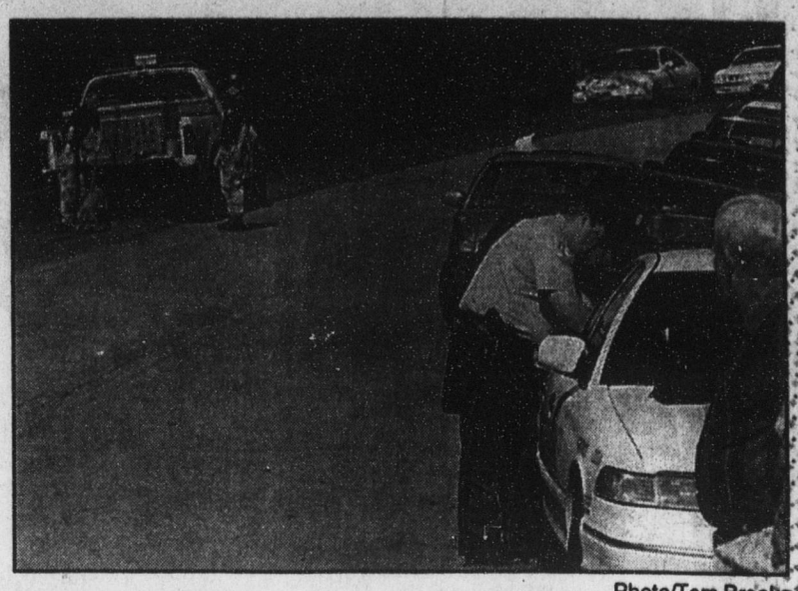

Dawson County officials were called to the scene around 2:30 p.m. Thursday, after three Gilmer County hunters found the body during the opening day of deer season.

Carlisle said members of the hunting party left the scene, near the old Lockheed facility on state wildlife management land and went to a nearby home to make the call to authorities.

When two officers confirmed the report and secured the crime scene, Carlisle said his agents immediately notified the GBI office in Gainesville and requested a crime scene technician be dispatched to the scene.

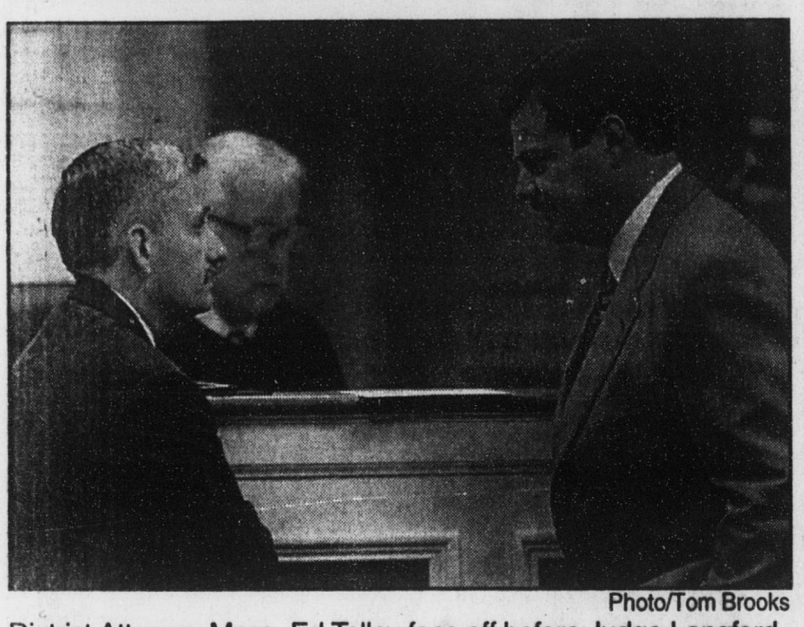

When Dawson officials realized the boy's description matched that of the boy reported missing in an earlier radio-broadcasted lookout, they notified Forsyth officials.

Carlisle said his department will continue to work with other state and local agencies to find the person or persons responsible for the homicide.

District Attorney Moss, Ed Tolley face off before Judge Langford.

said.

Tolley's argument appeared to come across strongly to the jury, which, following the reading of the not guilty verdict, had a prepared statement for the court.

The foreman said the jurors strongly recommends a review of the policies and procedures of the Planning and Zoning Department.

Tolley said Bowen's case was a clear indication of problems within the county's department, calling his client a "test case."

Commissioner Andy Anderson, who sat through all three days of the trial, said the board will definitely take a look at the way permitting is done, including making changes to county building ordinances.

"We have to make sure employees and citizens have documentation and are clear on instructions and policies," said Anderson.

Tolley relied heavily on the argument against government in his defense. Only Julian's wife, Susan, and one of her co-workers were called to testify. Both said the couple was having family problems which forced them into building the house in question.

Bowen's sister-in-law was on the stand briefly on Thursday, but never finished her testimony as the defense rested first thing Friday morning.

Susan Bowen testified she and Bowen were building the Ford Street house in 1994 as a retirement home, but wanted her mother-in-law to live there for seven years.

District Attorney Gary Moss presented two other incidents in which Bowen applied for and used self-work affidavits to build houses.

Self-work permits allow home residents to build for themselves without having to pay for licensed contractors.

Moss argued Bowen got the permits so he wouldn't have to pay for contractors, built the homes himself, then sold them.

Bowen was originally indicted on six counts, two for each house. But four of the counts were thrown out by Senior Judge John Langford in August because the time period for prosecuting the crime had expired.

Those houses were offered as evidence by Moss to show a pattern.

Moss asked jurors during closing arguments to look at the pattern of behavior by Bowen, and consider whether it made sense for the couple to build a retirement home that wouldn't be used for seven years.

Following Bowen's acquittal, Moss said he was disappointed in the verdict.

Neither Moss nor Bowen would comment on the pending case against local businessman Bill Marett.

Marett was arrested in May for allegedly trying to bribe Bowen. Following that arrest, Moss said Bowen would be a key part of the Marett case, and Moss declined to take the Marett case to the Grand Jury seeking an indictment until the Bowen matter was concluded.

Wanted man turns self in

The wanted Forsyth County man found by authorities in Michigan in September turned himself in to the Sheriff's Office Thursday.

Scott David Watts, 34, was wanted on nine separate counts, including two felonies, after beating and fleeing Sheriff's Office and Department of Natural Resources agents July 26.

Watts reportedly violated a protective order when he returned to his Bay Lane home July 25. When agents tried to apprehend him, Watts fled by boat on Lake Lanier.

He eluded investigators during pursuit. It was originally thought he drowned, but he was later spotted in the area. Federal marshals found him working on docks in Michigan.

Watts is being held in the jail without bond.

He is charged with seven counts including aggravated stalking and failure to stop for law enforcement. No court date has been set.

15th fatality is investigated

A Gwinnett County man died Wednesday afternoon after being involved in a one-vehicle accident on Castleberry Road.

According to Sheriff's Office reports, Michael Burke, 44, was ejected from his Chevrolet truck near the intersection of Castleberry and Piney Grove roads about 3:50 p.m.

Burke was heading north on Castleberry when he lost control of the truck. It crossed the center line and flipped several times.

Burke was taken to Baptist North Hospital, then airlifted to Georgia Baptist Hospital in Atlanta. He died later the same day. Authorities said Burke suffered massive internal injuries.

No one else was injured in the accident.

This was the 15th traffic fatality on county roads this year.

According to Sheriff's Office reports, there have been several accidents on Castleberry Road, but no fatalities.
